1.5 Essay Questions

1) How has the role of corrections changed since 2000 B.C.? What are the current goals of corrections?

Answer: Answers should address the fact that the role of corrections has changed significantly since 2000 B.C. At that time, the fledgling corrections system was focused on eliminating wrongdoers, either through execution or banishment from that jurisdiction. Having to live unsupported by a social network meant the person was vulnerable to starvation or being killed by wild animals. About 1650 B.C., codes of behavior began to be passed by emerging countries, and both fines and restitution became possible. With the advent of the Christian church, two separate systems of justice emerged: one for the nobility and the other for the common man. In this development, the focus of corrections grew to include reformation and penitence. The period known as the Enlightenment (1650 through the end of the eighteenth century) brought major changes to correctional philosophy, and philosophers began to develop limits to the still dominant punitive role of corrections. Enlightenment leaders argued for human rights, humane and measured treatment, and alternatives to punishment as important roles for corrections. By 1790, American Quakers included financial penalties for most offenses, and their efforts led to the development of the first penitentiary in the nation: the Walnut Street Jail. This was the beginning of the penitentiary movement and its stress on reformation and training. Finally, in the twentieth century and as a result of massive overcrowding in penal facilities, the role of corrections expanded to include rehabilitation, education, vocational training, and community supervision. The other major outcome of the overcrowding was the decision by many states to develop alternatives to imprisonment, the intermediate sanctions or alternative sentencing practices that were designed to provide community protection through the use of sanctions falling between probation and incarceration. Currently, the role of corrections is to punish, rehabilitate, ensure public safety, and prepare people for their return back into society.

Objective: Summarize the definition, mission, and role of corrections.

Level: Difficult

2) Discuss the historical relationship between crime and sin.

Answer: Answers should describe how punishment of the individual in the name of the state also included the concept of superstitious revenge. Here, crime was entangled with sin, and punishment in the form of wergeld (payment to the victim) or Friedensgeld (payment to the state) was not sufficient. If society believed the crime might have offended a divinity, the accused had to undergo a long period of progressively harsher punishment to appease the gods. As time passed, the zone between church law and state law became more blurred, and the concept of personal responsibility for one's act was combined with the need to "get right with God." The early codes, even the Ten Commandments, were designed to make the punishment acceptable to both society and God.

Objective: Summarize early responses to crime prior to the development of prisons.

Level: Intermediate

3) Describe how secular law emerged.

Answer: Answers should review the three laws identified by Thomas Aquinas—lex eternal, lex naturalis, and lex humana—and stress that lex humana was considered valid only if it did not conflict with the other two. They should include the notion that as secular leaders (monarchs) became more powerful they wanted to pull away from the divine legal order of the church, due to its restrictions on their power. Answers should also discuss Sir Thomas More's views on the unification of church and state and his theory regarding the effect of punishment on crime prevention.

Objective: Describe how secular law emerged.

Level: Difficult

4) Discuss the most common forms of state punishment used over the centuries and explain the basic purposes underlying these punishments. What popular practice was used in early America and why?

Answer: Answers should describe the various types of corporal punishments used on criminals, as well as discussing capital punishment. These acts symbolized retribution, and were also used to obtain confessions, often from innocent persons. In early America, a popular practice was to carry out these punishments in public. This was due to a belief that punishment, particularly capital punishment but also punishments that led to the offender's public humiliation, would act as a deterrent to potential wrongdoers.

Objective: Summarize sentencing goals and primary punishment philosophies.

Level: Difficult

5) Define the Age of Enlightenment and explain how it influenced and changed penal philosophy.

Answer: Answers should explain that the Age of Enlightenment was a philosophical movement during the 18th century that stressed rejection of traditional social, political and religious ideas while emphasizing rationalism. During this period, philosophers began to recognize and embrace the idea of humane treatment for offenders and to challenge traditional ideas underlying criminal law and punishment. Prior to this time, penal philosophy was geared toward punishment with no care for the dignity of the imprisoned person. Punishment could be extremely torturous and brutal, and early prison conditions are terribly inhumane. The Age of Enlightenment steered penal institutions toward more dignified, compassionate incarceration and treatment.

Objective: Outline the development of the prison.

Level: Difficult

6) List and explain three of Cesare Beccaria's proposals regarding crime and social policy.

Answer: Answers may include references to these ideas put forth by Beccaria: crime is to be considered an injury to society; prevention of crime is more important than punishment; torture should be abolished; society should strive for the happiness of its people; punishment's purpose is deterrence; there should be no capital punishment; imprisonment should be widely used but with improved conditions; an individual is innocent until proven guilty; an individual cannot testify against himself; an individual should have the right to counsel, and an individual should have the right to a trial by jury.

Objective: Outline the development of the prison.

Level: Difficult

1.6 Critical Thinking Questions

1) What can we learn from studying the history of corrections?

Answer: Answers will vary. As with the study of any type of history, we are able to examine what has worked and what hasn't over time and circumstances. This examination can help us to apply the wisdom of past philosophers and enable us to apply it to our lives today. It will help us try to reduce crime, keep society safe, better understand criminals, rehabilitate redeemable offenders, and more successfully run correctional institutions.

Objective: Multiple

Level: Difficult

2) Discuss whether a Bridewell-type facility that is based on the concept of the Quaker's Great Law would be effective in the United States today.

Answer: Answers will vary but should demonstrate a clear understanding of Bridewells and the philosophies incorporated in the Great Law. Students should apply their understanding of these concepts to modern-day America and support their views regarding whether or not this type of facility might be effective today.

Objective: Outline the development of the prison.

Level: Difficult
